

THE FUNERAL TRAIN.

The Passage of the Remains from Columbus, Ohio, to Indianapolis, Indiana.

OBSEQUIES AT INDIANAPOLIS.

INDIANAPOLIS, April 30, 1865.
Governor Brough and his staff took leave of the train at Columbus, and at eight o'clock it was on the way to Indianapolis.

ALONG THE ROAD
The people appeared to the number of thousands, carrying torches and kindling bonfires to enable them clearly to see the funeral car, and as it lit its way.

AT WOODSTOCK
There was both instrumental and vocal music, and the tolling of bells and other manifestations of mourning.

AT VERNON
The people were congregated by thousands. The scene was lit up with a hundred torches and bonfires, gun were fired and bells tolled, and there was music from an instrumental band, but the melody which charmed the most was from a choir of both males and females, standing upon the platform, who sang a deeply impressive hymn. The train stopped a few minutes and several young ladies came into the funeral car with floral crosses and wreaths and deposited them upon the coffin.

AT WESTVILLE AND CONOVER
There were large gatherings of people, and bells were tolled and minute guns fired.

AT PIQUA
The railroad station was adorned with Chinese lanterns and flags in conjunction with dark mourning drapery.

IN THE STATE OF INDIANA
On Sunday morning over ten thousand people gathered at Richmond, Ind., notwithstanding the early hour at which the train passed, the rain and the cold of the weather. The train here passed under an arch bridge constructed for the purpose by the Air Line Railroad. It had a span of twenty-five feet and was thirty feet in height. The abutments were trimmed with evergreens, dotted with white roses and mourning drapery in close association. On this bridge was the representation of a coffin covered with the national flag, a female figure kneeling, as if in the act of weeping. A soldier and a sailor at either side of the coffin completed the group.

Major General Hooker was here made the recipient of a photograph of Abraham Lincoln set in a gilt frame, ornamented with white flowers interlaced with black and white rows of ribbon.

GOVERNOR MORTON
came on board at Richmond. The committee from Indianapolis follow him in a special train.

AT DUBLIN
The train also passed under an arch thirty feet high, dotted with small United States flags. At the depot there were pictures, wreathed with flags, representing Washington, Lincoln, Sherman, Grant and Ellsworth. Dublin is the place which gave Abraham Lincoln its entire vote at the last Presidential election. Nearly two thousand persons were assembled here.

The State is plunged in the depth of grief. This is shown, not by the magnificent demonstrations in her cities and towns, but along the line the farm houses are decorated with mourning, and their inmates gather in clusters, and by the light of bonfires and torches catch glimpses of the train which was bearing from their sight the lamented Chief Magistrate.

ARRIVAL AT INDIANAPOLIS.
On the arrival here, at six A. M., all the avenues leading to the depot were thickly packed with people. Every moment the crowd increased in density. Every street poured out its contribution of men, women and children, eagerly seeking, with sad and solemn faces, to obtain a view of the train. The military had been drawn up in open order, facing inward, extending from Illinois and Washington streets up to the State House doors.

After some little delay the corpse was taken charge of by the local guard of honor, under command of Colonel Simmons, and tenderly taken to the house, the city band playing a sad and mournful dirge, called "Lincoln's Funeral March," composed expressly for the occasion by Charles Hess, of Cincinnati.

Through the open ranks of the soldiers, standing at present arms, the procession then took up its line of march to the State House, in the falling rain and amid the sound of tolling bells, and the occasional firing of cannon. All along the entire line of march the citizens thronged the sidewalks, balconies and doorsteps, catching fleeting glimpses of all that is mortal of Abraham Lincoln.

The hearse conveying the remains is fourteen feet long, five feet wide and thirteen feet high, and covered with black velvet. It is carried by four horses, trimmed with silver fringe. The roof of the car bears twelve white plumes, trimmed with black. On the top is a beautiful eagle, silver gilt. The sides are studded with large silver stars. The car was drawn by eight white horses, with black velvet coverings, bearing each a black plume, trimmed with white. Six of these same horses were attached to the carriage, over four years ago, in which Abraham Lincoln rode through Indianapolis, while on his way to Washington to be inaugurated. All the streets bear the usual badges and emblems of mourning; but Washington street presents the finest display. All the interesting streets are triple arches adorned with evergreens and national flags, arranged in the most tasteful and beautiful manner. This is the first time we have seen such arms erected over the carriage-ways since we have been in the city.

The inclosure of the State House square is being hung with wreaths of arbor vitae. At each corner on Washington street small arches trimmed with evergreens have been erected. The main entrance on Washington street is a structure of considerable size, containing quite a variety of styles of architecture. It is about twenty-five feet high, forty feet in length and twenty-four feet wide. Underneath is a carriage-way twelve feet wide, with a six foot passage way on either side. The main pillars are fluted and high. Portraits of Grant, Sherman, Farragut and Morton are suspended from the pillars, while on the pedestals at the top, rest handsome busts of Washington, Webster, Clay and Lincoln. The entire structure is beautifully shrouded in black and white, relieved by evergreen garlands, with a blue display of flags. At the north side a simple Gothic arch, decorated with the usual drapery of black and white, has been erected. The pillars of the south front of the Capitol are spirally covered with alternate white and black cloth, the latter edged with evergreen, while the coat of arms of the State is placed in the pediment.

During the performance of a funeral dirge, the tolling of bells and the booming of cannon, the coffin is carried to the interior of the State House, in the presence of the military and civic escort which has accompanied the remains from Washington. Along the walls as we enter are likenesses of Washington, Lincoln, Johnson, Sherman, Grant, Hovey, Morton, Douglas, Sherman, Grant, Colonel Dick O'Neil, and Edward Everett, and busts of Washington, Lincoln, Jackson, Webster, Clay and Douglas are placed at intervals. Their bronze busts were placed at intervals. Flowers and evergreens were liberally entered into the artistic arrangements. Heavy black cloth is hung in the rotunda, looped at the pillars with large white tassels. Immediately beneath the dome hangs the chandelier, with numerous branches, and from which a mellow light is shed upon the scene. The platform is in the centre of the rotunda. On this the coffin is placed, surrounded by flowers, white wreaths and floral crosses lie upon the lid.

The remains were, soon after their arrival, exposed to the public view.

The City Councils of Louisville and Cincinnati and a delegation from Covington, together with Governor Bramlette, of Kentucky, were here to-day to take part in the funeral procession. Thousands of persons from the surrounding country thronged the city. When the coffin was being placed on the date in the Capitol to-day a choir sang a funeral hymn to the accompaniment of a piano. Several ladies were in attendance meantime arranging flowers, pausing occasionally to wipe the tears from their faces. The heavy black drapings of the rotunda, and the soft light reflected upon the features of the deceased from the chandelier, gave to the entire scene a supernatural appearance, and could not fail to solemnize every heart. All felt the awe that reigned around the presence of the dead. The Sabbath school children were first admitted; then the ladies and citizens severally passed through the hall from north to south. It was designed to have a grand military and civic procession, with an address by Governor Morton and other exercises, this afternoon, in the vicinity of the Capitol, but the rain which has been falling throughout

SHERMAN.

Our Special Washington Despatch.
WASHINGTON, April 30, 1865.

General Grant has returned in most excellent spirits. He expresses much gratification at the prompt execution of the orders of the government in reference to the agreement between General Sherman and Joe Johnston. General Sherman met the Lieutenant General twenty miles from the front. He received the order of disapproval with most commendable good grace. There was no hesitation, no murmuring, nor any expression of dissatisfaction at the disapproval of the terms entered into between him and the rebel general; but, without any delay or argument in defence of the course previously pursued, General Sherman and his generals, with true soldierly spirit, set to work with alacrity to carry out the views of the government communicated by General Grant. Within five minutes a despatch was sent to Johnston terminating the armistice upon the receipt of the notification by the rebel papers, and orders were given for our troops in the rear to move up to the front. In a few hours General Grant Blair, with his corps, was in motion. General Sherman had informed Johnston that the government would not sanction the terms proposed, and that he should immediately resume hostilities. Immediately upon the receipt of this notice Johnston sent back a flag of truce asking an interview with Sherman to arrange other terms of surrender, which was promptly made, upon the basis of the terms given to General Lee.

May Term of the Law Courts.
The May term of the law courts commences to-day. But little business was transacted last month in consequence of the assassination of the President, and the result is the calendar for this term is unusually heavy and replete with cases of interest. The strong divorce case in the Superior Court, Grant vs. Divorce case in the Superior Court, will probably be tried this month. The lawyers can scarce. There will be two branches of the Supreme Court, circuit, in session, also general and special terms. In the Superior Court there will be two trial terms, as usual; also general term and chambers. The Court of Common Pleas, which is considerably hampered with business, will hold two trial terms, under Judges Brady and Cardozo.

The May term of the General Sessions commences this morning, Judge Russell presiding. Assistant District Attorney Bedford will prosecute the indictments. In consequence of the suspension of business last month, occasioned by the death of President Lincoln, the criminal calendar is very large, and consequently the present term will be a very busy one. But the energy and efficiency which the City Judge and the District Attorney and his assistants have heretofore shown in the transaction of the public business, affords a sufficient guarantee that the large number of persons now awaiting trial in the Tombs, charged with various offences, will be disposed of during the month.
